Great patient relationships, challenging management environment

Lead Care Manager

A typical day as a Lead Care Manager included calling patients, documenting encounters, coordinating resources, and conducting in-person meetings. The role was very hands-on and relationship-based, which I truly enjoyed. Building trust with patients and supporting them through personal health challenges was the most rewarding part of the job. Coming from a healthcare background, this position helped me grow in communication, care coordination, and patient advocacy skills.

This job is a good opportunity for gaining experience, especially for those newer to care management. However, the work environment can be challenging. There is a strong emphasis on metrics and productivity, and management closely monitors performance. While accountability is important, the approach can sometimes feel overly critical. Communication from upper leadership did not always feel supportive, particularly when team members had questions or were behind on goals.

The hardest part of the job was balancing meaningful patient care with strict performance expectations. The most enjoyable part was the relationships built with patients and seeing their progress over time. Overall, while I value the experience I gained, I would recommend this company primarily to those seeking short-term experience rather than long-term growth.

Pros

Meaningful patient relationships, Hands-on care coordination experience, Strong communication skill development, Exposure to resource management, Good entry-level healthcare experience

Cons

Heavy emphasis on metrics with closely monitored performance, and management communication could feel overly critical rather than supportive.
